Too Many Activities?

The semester draws to a close, it is a good time to survey the total picture of college work and to decide what is important and what is merely time consuming. The stress seems to be laid on extra-curricular activities rather than on the academic. There is not a proper balance between the two fields of activities.

It would be a good idea to have a complete vacation from the extra-curricular activities. How long this recess should be depends upon the length of time required for the students to realize the importance or the unimportance of each activity he engages in. It might be only two weeks, a month, or a month and a half. During this time there should be a complete cessation of all the extra-curricular. Of course it must be granted that this plan would work a hardship on many organizations which have the entire year's program planned and a definite schedule worked out.

But too many students and teachers are trying to do too much. It is only through evaluation of each activity that the student can choose those activities which will benefit him or which he will be able to assist the most.

After a recess of several weeks, the student should choose only those activities which mean the most to him, drop the others, and concentrate his efforts on those which interest him most and which are important to him.

I Lay Down The Pen

As the last issue of the Spectator for this semester goes to press, I wish to express my pleasure in being able to serve McPherson College in the capacity of editor of the school paper. Viewing my semester's work in retrospect, I find I have profited by my associations with others interested in journalism, and from my experience gained in assuming the responsibilities of editorship.

Much work has gone into the Spectator and a lot is involved in putting out a paper. It has been a privilege to work with a good staff. We were sometimes impatient when copy did not come in to meet deadlines, and when social activities interfered with work, but, all in all, the Spec has suffered no serious difficulties, and the publication schedule has been met.

As I lay down the pen at the close of my editorship, I want to thank all who have helped in any way to put out the Spectator. I desire to wish the best for next semester's staff. Good luck, Dayton, as editor-in-chief, I have worked with you and am confident in your capabilities as you take up your duties. Best wishes, Marianna, as managing editor; and congratulations to the campus editor for your appointment.

And now I lay down the pen as editor of the Spectator.

injure 160,000 people and devastate four square miles. This is great power but the interest of the people should be in the power to build up homes rather than to destroy them.

The kind of power is needed that will make races live together in peace and harmony and make the United Nations work successfully. Ingredients of this kind of power are knowledge, enthusiasm, conviction, and devotion. The early Christians had seen Jesus and they had a deep conviction that he was right. Uncertainty and wavering lead only to weakness. If a man has an ideal to be devoted to he is happy. It takes all off these ingredients to have power.

The power that runs the Grand Coulee Dam is borrowed power. It is borrowed from the Columbia River. The power that runs the bulldozer is borrowed power. It is borrowed from gasoline. Men are not ashamed to use this borrowed power.

This other kind of power is also borrowed. It comes from above, and no one should be ashamed to borrow it. This power is obtained by opening our hearts and minds to God. The tasks of men are all too big and help is needed from above and each and every man should not hesitate to go to God for this help. As each individual goes to God he becomes a channel for power from above and leads it to others on earth, making life on earth a better one.

Behind The Scenes

the job of seeing that the copy for the Bullrangles gets in and down to The Republican for printing on time. And Mary Jane Freeburg is sort of a jack of all trades, helping with copy writing and selling ads. And this brings us to the other half of the staff, the business half. Carl Beckwith as business manager raises the funds used to pay for all that goes into making the Quad what it is. He sells and sets up ads, sells Quads (do you have yours yet?) and pays the bills. Expenses have gone up and his is the ticklish job of trying to keep the books in balance and in black. Sybil Miller is his shadow, doing the same things he does as his assistant. The two of them have been right on their toes, and Carl seems even cheerful as he pays those bills.

So there they are... the people behind the scenes who are making this year's Quadrangle the best of them all.

Professor Hess is the silent member of the staff. As faculty advisor he listens helpfully to the tangled questions of the staff and keeps things headed towards publication. Mr. Fries keeps his eye on Carl, and helps with the financial end of things.

Second College Night After Church Service

The School of Missions is continuing with its emphasis on missions this Sunday with a play, "Empty Hands." The play is scheduled for the evening meeting. Next Sunday the annual Birthday Dinner will be held with a large crowd expected.

This Sunday following the evening services, the college students will hold their second "College Night." The hosts for the evening will be several adult couples selected from the church. The Recreation Council will be in charge of the games.

2. The ideal citizen is one who has among other noble qualities a wholesome combination of independence and cooperativeness in his philosophy of life.
3. The only way to improve human society is to produce better people.
4. The United Nations can, and must be made a genuine agency for justice and lasting peace.
5. Character building must keep pace with scientific and industrial progress.
6. Military mindedness and policy making are not guarantees of goodwill and peaceful relations among nations.

It is claimed that each of us should have at least one hobby. One of mine is collecting co-incidences. The following have occurred since living in Kansas.

1. On a Sunday evening in my home while reading "Literary England" by Scherman and Wilcox, a radio program came on provided by natives in the Back Country in England.
2. On a Santa Fe train to Kansas City I got into conversation with a man who said his wife heard me speak at a Chapel service at the School of the Ozarks in 1938.
3. At the dinner table in the Lone Star Church near Lawrence, Kansas, Mrs. Peters and I met a lady whom it was discovered was a grand daughter of a sister of Mrs. Peter's father.
4. My next-door neighbor to the West, was born in the same house in Virginia in which Mrs. Peters' grandfather Stoner was born.
5. When at the Appanoose Church near Ottawa, I met a Mr. and Mrs. Flora and discovered that he and my father were cousins and that she and my mother were cousins.
