Campus Has 40 Tree Varieties

By Ola Disu

Unrealistically, many of us are missing a great deal by neglecting to take a few minutes of time to ponder about our surroundings here on McPherson College campus.

We are really blessed with many things on the campus and many neglect to take advantage of these blessings. Unlike many other campuses in the nation, we have 40 varieties of trees on the campus.

But how many of us ever thought to pay the least attention or show interest to know some of these trees by their names and consider their uses? Historically, jubube and ginkgo trees have been among those trees which survived the glacier period. These trees are considered the oldest trees in the world.

Cedar, ash, hackberry, cypress, walnut, and pine are trees of great value. They are considered very high in commerce. Industrially, they are always in great demand for the making of such articles as paper, furniture, home buildings and many other things.

No one will deny the importance of fruits in our daily diet. If we could get our daily need of fruits there would be no need for us to spend so many dollars for buying vitamins. Fortunately, we have some good fruit trees on the campus.

We can wisely spend some of our time examining and learning to know what these trees look like. Surprisingly, many of us do not know how fruit trees are different from other trees.

Among these fruit trees on campus are pear, peach, apricot and mulberry.

We have many American elm and Chinese elm trees on the campus, because they grow fast and provide good shade for resting.

Howdy Folks Contact Jerry or Vernona

John Ward Contributes To Society By Teaching

"It wasn't because of the money," was Prof. John Ward's reply when he was quizzed about the reasons he had chosen teaching for a profession.

He then added on a more serious note, "I became a teacher because I thought I could make a greater contribution to society in that line of work than in any other."

Prof. John K. Ward, Maccollege's Director of Rural Life and Manager of College Farm, graduated from McPherson College with the Class of '50. His major was business administration, for at that time the college had no rural life department.

The next two years were spent with the U. S. Army. While in the service he served as a cryptographic technician.

Following release from the army, he attended Kansas State College for two semesters and two summer sessions. At the end of this time he had completed his B.S. degree in agriculture.

He next studied at Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College where he received his M.S. in animal nutrition in 1956. While there he had a graduate teaching and research assistantship.

"I lack about a year on a Ph.D.," says Prof. Ward. His plans for the next few years include earning his Ph.D. in either animal nutrition or biochemistry.

This able professor, who is this spring completing his second year on the Maccollege faculty, also manages and lives on the college farm.

Proof of his achievements as college farm manager lie in the fact that the college farm dairy herd ranked second in production records in Kansas in the month of March.

"I'm not trying to send everyone back to the farm, but I would like to see students develop more understanding and appreciation for the rural life," says John Ward about his work in the rural life department.

However, all is not work and study for this busy professor. Photography is one of his hobbies, and he enjoys taking pictures of living things and especially his two children. A few years back he specialized in taking night pictures.

"I also play a round of golf quarterly or semi-annually," added Prof. Ward.

He met his wife, the former Bonnie Martin, while in college. Says Prof. Ward, "I suppose the most interesting thing about my wife and I is the fact that while I was Student Council President, she was Student Council President-elect."

Because of their respective offices, it was necessary for the two of them to attend a student council convention together.

"I guess that started something as far as we were concerned," commented Prof. Ward.

Bonnie and John Ward now have two sons, four-year-old Martin and two-year-old Steven.

Pondering With The President . . . Four Men In A Boat

By Dr. D. W. Bittinger
Four Quakers, believing that atomic bombing is a movement away from progress and world advancement, purchased a small boat and set sail into the Eniwetok area of the Pacific, where the current atomic tests are to take place. They named their 30-foot boat "The Golden Rule."
They did this without a great deal of fanfare, but they let the government know that when these bombs were dropped, their little boat would be blown to bits and they themselves would die.
Normally the government would not regard the lives of four people as very important in a matter connected with war.
In the same week that these men sailed, five men were killed and more than a hundred were injured in a practice parachute jump under the direction of the military.

Yet to fly overhead and drop a bomb knowingly and directly upon four people who were waiting to be destroyed as a protest against this method of international procedure, smote even the conscience of the government.

Very likely the buck was passed from desk to desk before an order was finally written informing these men that they would not be allowed to sail into the bomb area.

The reason the government hesitated to give such an order is that it publicized what they are doing and also publicized the fact that there are four people who believe that bombing is neither necessary nor helpful in solving our present world problems.

These four men received the restraining order, but driven by their consciences to protest against the future slaughter of many lives by losing their own lives, they continued to sail westward in their boat.

What the eventual outcome of this experience of four men in a boat will be remains to be seen. Let us hope, if they are able to sail on into the bomb area and if the bomb falls and their boat is blown to pieces and they are killed, that publicity which may be given to this will cause many across our world to stop to meditate.

A bomb was dropped once before, and 88,000 people were killed in an instant, and many more thousands were injured and permanently deformed. Not much was thought of it then; it was a part of war.

Now, four men sail under a bomb offering their lives as a protest against the killing of 1,500,000 or more in one bomb drop.

Will history consider such people heroes? In the long future, will it be written that it was four men in a boat and others like them who stopped the mad march toward suicidal war?

Or will they be forgotten almost entirely? And if they are heard of by only a few, will they be written off as foolish?

We must wait for history to give the answer.

But in the meantime, we can say, "Here is a type of heroism which is magnificent. Here is a type of conscience which causes men to stand up and be counted, even with their lives."

There was a man like that once before. His impress lies strongly across the world. He has changed the world. He will continue to change it.

Chaff Pens Poetry . . .

Rhymes For Rocketing

By Faus, Foley, and Harris

When the Russians sent Sputnik I into orbit, the American people were aroused. For months, the national magazines and periodicals carried nothing but articles on how American education was ignoring the challenge of the space age. Almost every issue carried articles on science. America was science mad.

Then the international situation cooled off, and now the American public has again sunk into apathy. To remedy this, CHAFF has thought up a far-reaching program to again strike fear into the hearts of those who would turn America back to the age of isolation.

The Chaff program is designed to purge the archaic American academic system of its useless frills, such as fine arts, English, history, music, and literature.

The Chaff program would be put into action when the new born child reaches eight days of age. At this time, in order to find where his natural talents lie, he is put into a room with three objects, a bottle of warm milk, a teddy bear, and a do-it-yourself cyclotron kit.

If the child choose either of the first two objects, he is an individual of mediocre talents. He will be trained to do common things, like crawling, walking, talking, and the like.

But for the gifted child who chooses the cyclotron kit we will not waste time with such trivial matters. Instead, he will start immediately with such basic things as differential calculus, analytical geometry, logarithms, atomic theory, theory of replacement of saturated diapers, etc. Chaff has great hopes for this crash program. In fact, a child under this program will be tested under rocket fuels at the age where most children are showing an interest in matches and fires.

But our program will extend to normal grade school students, also. Even literature in the grades will put emphasis on science. Nursery rhymes will be revised to impress upon these young minds the importance of meeting the challenge of the international brain race. Like this:

A Dillar, A Dollar

A dillar, a dollar
A six-o'clock scholar,
In Russia they start that soon.
Americans start at ten o'clock,
And fall asleep by noon.

Little Boy Blue

Little Boy Blue, come do your Trig,
The Reds are in space, there's no time to jig
Where is the boy who should do his math?
He's walking his girl down a moonlit path.

Hey, Diddle Diddle

Hey, diddle diddle, how we did piddle
While Russia was building a 'moon.
The Russians all laughed to see us flub,
When Vanguard blew up with a boom.

Star Light

Star light, star bright,
The first star I see tonight,
Wish I may, wish I might,
Ride the first manned satellite.

Twinkle, Twinkle

Twinkle, twinkle, little star,

Thirty-Three Mark Births

Today, Vilas Likhite, Bernard Desa, and Val Cheatham are celebrating their birthdays.

Coming birthdays are those of Donald Hawley, May 11; Evelyn Mollhagen, LeRoy Hayes, and Alma Goodfellow, May 12; Glenn Morland, Tai Kyun Kim, Carl Gustafson and Duane Fike, May 13; JoNelle Thoreen, May 14; Robert Shrock, May 15; and Wayne Grossnickle, May 16.

Others are Domingo Torres, Mildred Jacobson, and Lee Dadisman, May 17; Joyce Ulrich, May 18; Larry Wilson and Ellen Kurtz, May 19; Norma Hintz, May 22; Carl Harner, May 24; Dwight Oltman, May 27; Jacob Guenther, May 28; Carl Harris, May 29; Dean Young and Eui Young Kim, May 31.

Now I know just who are are,
The naughty Russians put you up,
A cruel prison for a pup.

You can see how these poems will subtly appeal to the scientific bent of your children, and will instill in them the idea of excelling the space race.

So in closing we say:
Jack be nimble, wake up soon,
Let's beat Russia to the moon.
