

Inauguration to climax Homecoming

by Cindy Mines

When President Blair Helman of Manchester College, President Wayne Geisert of Bridgewater College, and President Emeritus Harold Fasnacht of LaVerne College, return to McPherson on Homecoming weekend, they may well agree that their alma mater is "A Place Where Dreams Are Born."

These McPherson College graduates, representing three of the six Church of the Brethren-related colleges, will join several other alumni as officiants in inauguration ceremonies for President Paul Hoffman.

Homecoming festivities will culminate Sunday, Oct. 17 at 2:30 p.m. in Brown Auditorium as Dr. Hoffman becomes the eleventh administrator and receives the McPherson College presidential medallion.

New chapter begins

"This is not just the inauguration of a president," said Dr. Hoffman, "it is the start of a new chapter in the life of the college as well as recommitment of all the constituents to the college."

Leading the processional of more than one hundred representatives in academic regalia will be four marshalls; Steve Burkholder and Christy Young, 1975-76 Stuco president and vice president, and Dr. Gilford Ikenberry and Dr. Raymond Flory, faculty members.

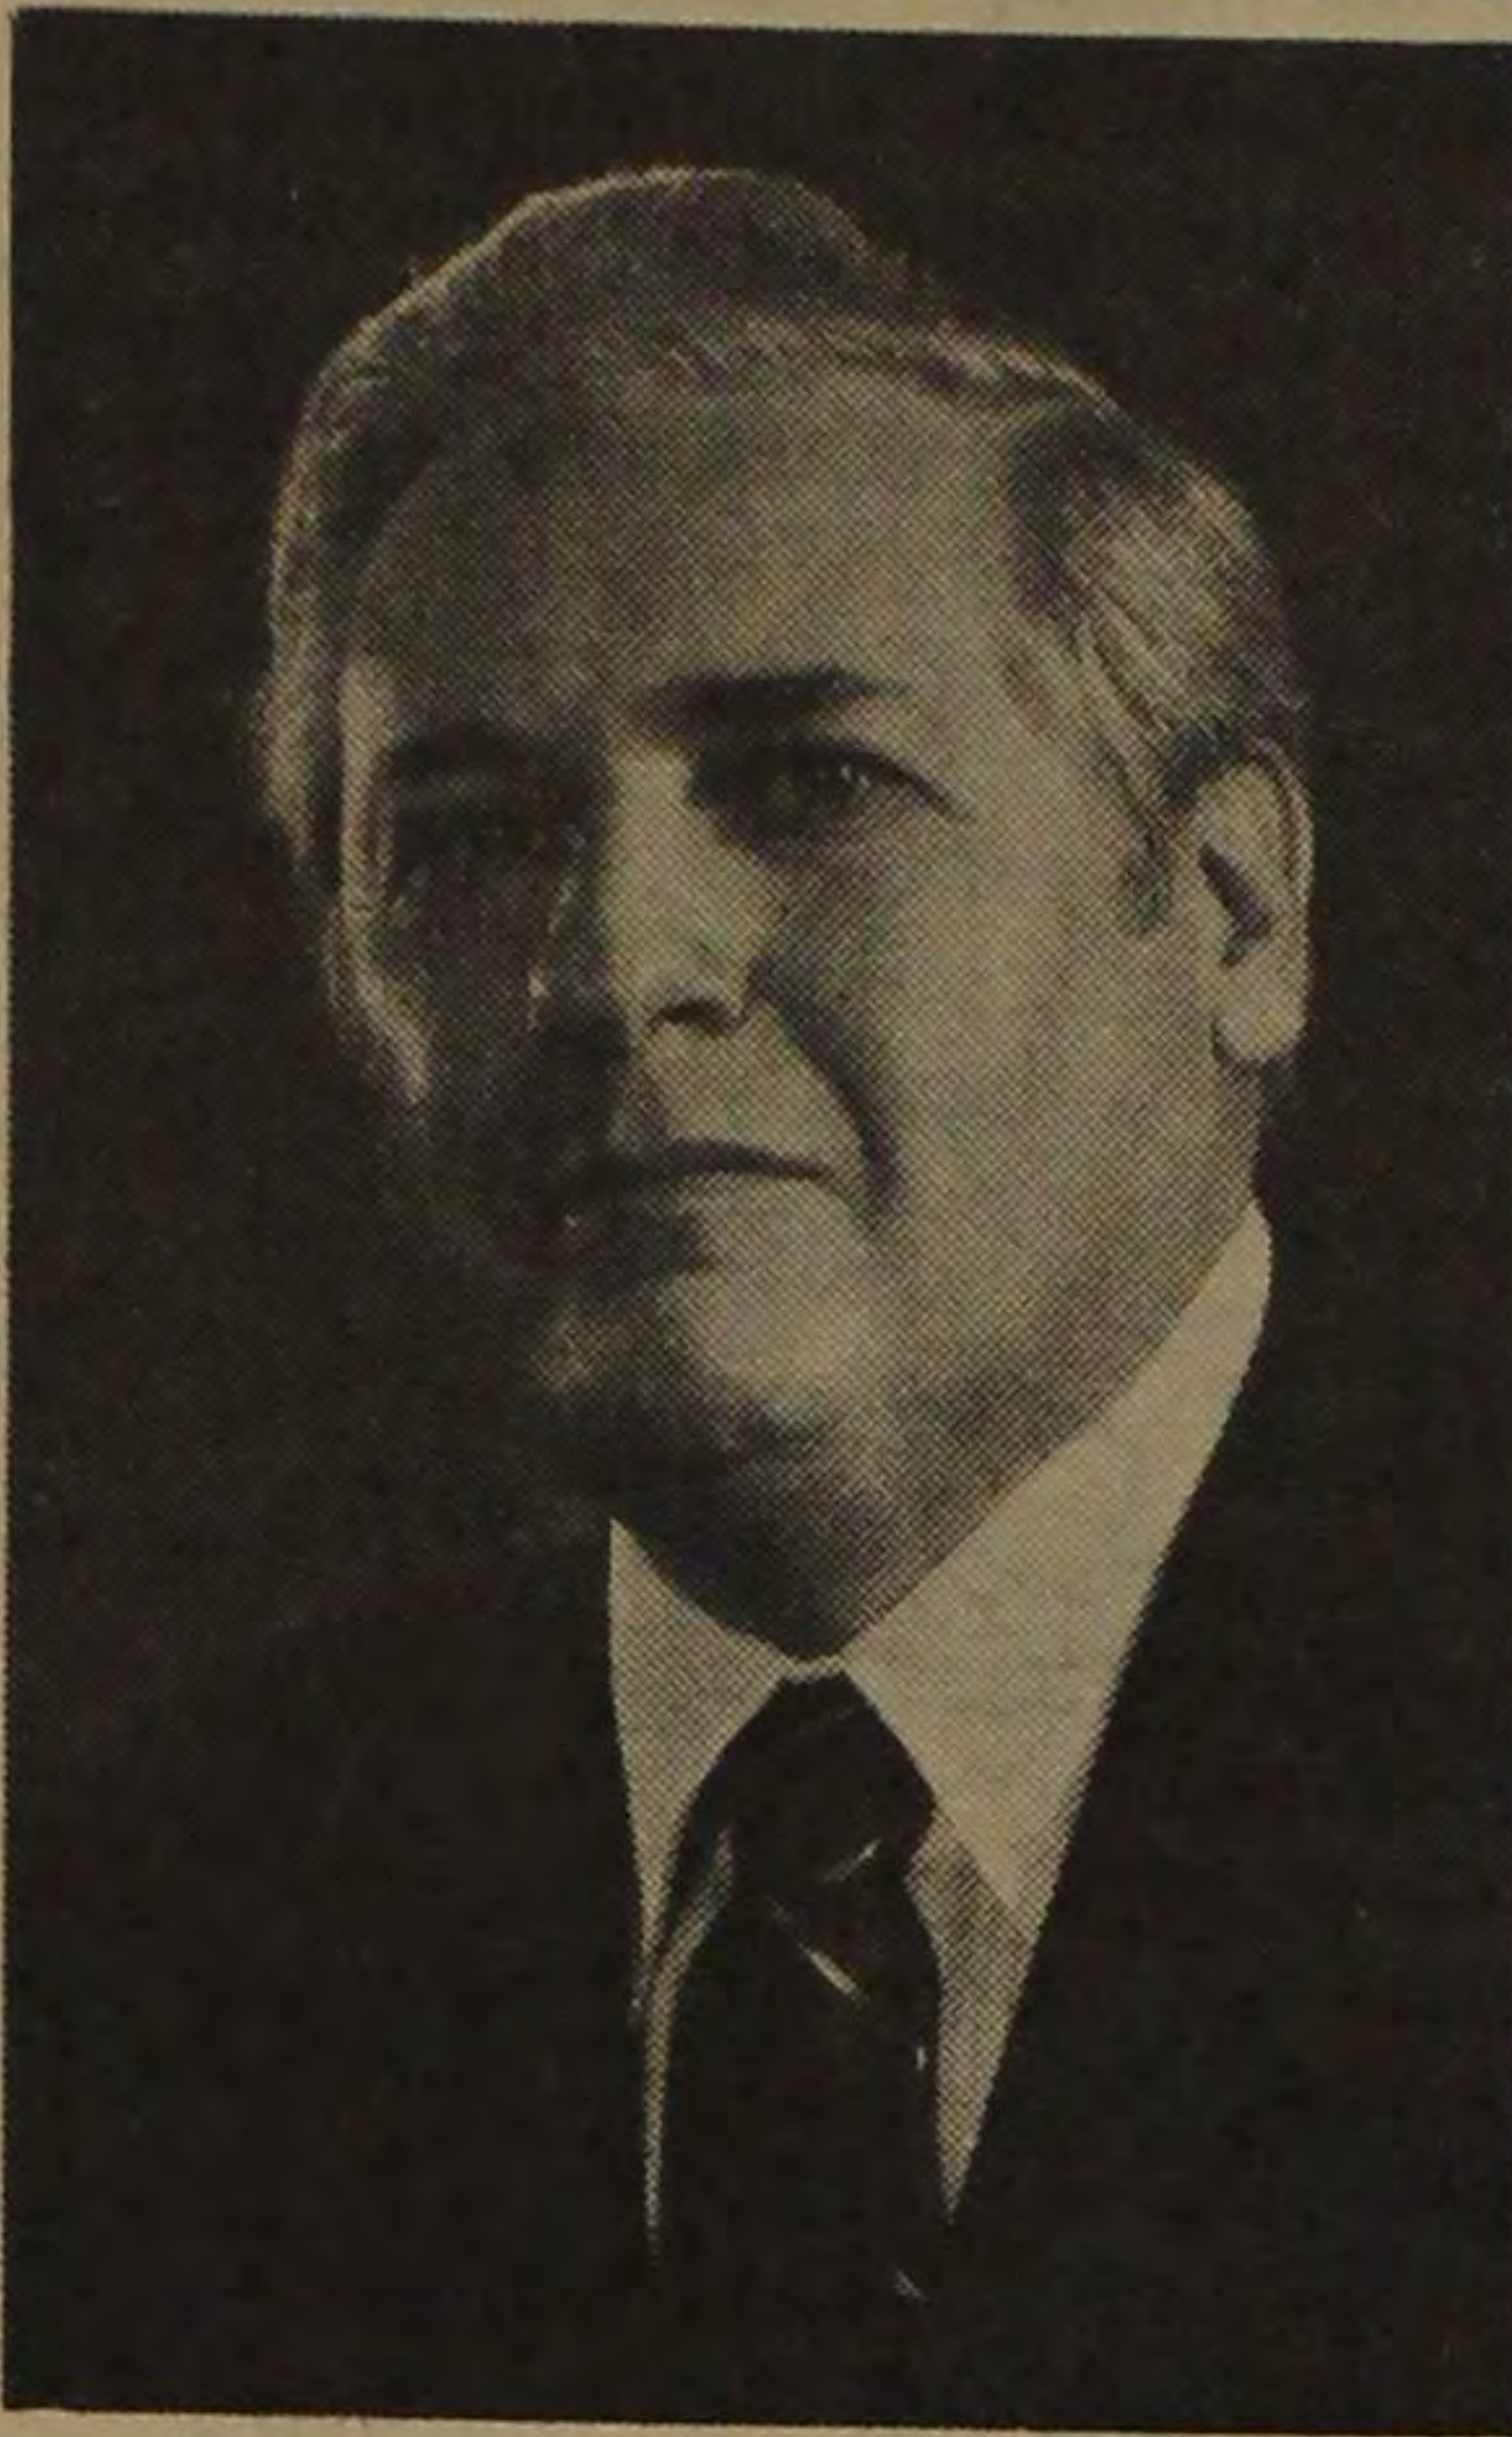

Following the delegates of colleges and universities, delegates of learned societies and associations and the college faculty will be student and staff representatives, segments of the college community seldom recognized in inauguration ceremonies.

Students participate

Representing the student body will be Jeff Carter, Lori Shepherd, frs.; Paula Schnaithman, Grand Odokara, sophs.; Lisa Gaskill, Fred Wilson, jr.; and Casey Jaworski, Jan Schrock, srs.

Merrin Godfrey and Mrs. Miriam Dell will be the staff representatives.

Dr. Hoffman will conclude the processional and will be preceded by the trustees, pastor representatives, officiants, and the speaker, Dr. Helman.

A. Blair Helman

"Dr. Helman is not only one of the college's most distinguished graduates," said Dr. Hoffman, "but a close friend and was my president for 14 years as a faculty member at Manchester." Dr. Helman will speak on "The Mission of the Christian College."

Prof. Larry Kitzel and the McPherson College Ensemble will provide music for the processional and recessional. Other musical selections will be performed by approximately fifty students in Prof. Ron Aden's A Cappella Choir.

Ron Hovis, 1976-77 Stuco president, will participate in the actual installation of the president. In addition, he and other council members will join faculty in hosting the processional participants in Miller Library before and after the ceremony. Cindy Mines, McPherson College Community Council representative, and other MCCC members will act as hosts and ushers in Brown Auditorium prior to the ceremony.

Everyone invited

Following the inauguration, Jan Schrock and the Mac Ambassadors will assist faculty members in hosting the reception in the Student Union. Lou Kelly and Saga Food Service are managing the reception fare and the Mac Dames, headed by Eloise Holman, have been invited to preside at serving tables.

Members of the Inauguration Committee include Kathy Ball, trustee; Ron Hovis, student; Stan Adams, staff member; Dr. Merlin Frantz, administrator; Norma Tucker, faculty member; Paul Jewell, chairman of the Board of Trustees; and Dr. Hoffman.

The new president stressed, "The students are very much invited to the inauguration and reception. I hope a number will be able to attend and participate as a very important part of the college community."

Work, headaches mount as curtain time nears

As curtain-time approaches for the drama department's homecoming production, "The Madwoman of Chaillot," activity mounts in Brown Auditorium.

When the house lights go down Oct. 14 and 16 at 8 p.m., the plot will unfold, culminating five weeks of preparation.

According to Dr. Linda Seger, drama, "The last week includes mainly detail work — everyone goes out of his mind."

She explained that the last week of rehearsals is not basically for the actors, but for the production crew.

"Everything must be timed out," she said.

Assisting Dr. Seger with behind-the-scenes details are assistant director Anne Erisman, jr, Warrensburg, Mo.; Cathy Mathews, fr, Whitewater, publicity; Lori Tunnel, fr, Colorado Springs, Co., props; and Karen Whippel, jr, Portland, Ore., sound.

Responsible for costuming are Sara Penner, jr, Mt. Morris, Ill.; Barbara Respass, fr, New York, N.Y.; and Candy Witmer, fr, Mt. Morris, Ill.

Working with Dr. Seger on lighting will be Gayle Broberg, sr, McPherson.

Prof. Una Yoder's stage make-up students are responsible for the production's greasepaint effects. Involved in set work are John Fleming, fr, Slippery, Rock, Ark. and Steve Newcomer, soph, Rockford, Ill.

According to Dr. Seger, "The production is basically a character show."

She explained that the play's effectiveness will hinge on bringing characters to life and making them seem funny and real.

"No one in this show can be himself," Dr. Seger said. "This makes it more demanding."

She added, "Every rehearsal is a growth experience."

Trivia bowl, pep rally tonight

Homecoming activities slated

"A Place Where Dreams are Born" will be the theme for the 1976 Homecoming, Oct. 15 and 16. Plans for the Homecoming events are already well on their way.

The social committee has planned activities including spirit window painting, the Trivia Bowl and, to top off the festivities, the Homecoming dance.

To start off the affair, students will paint slogans on the windows of downtown businesses the week before Homecoming. Charlotte McCann, chairperson of the social committee, commented, "lots of people and lots of ideas are needed to make it a success."

Activities will begin Friday, Oct. 15 with a pep rally after the evening meal. Immediately following the pep rally a "bed race" will be conducted at the football field.

According to Albert Zavala, one of the race's organizers, anyone can sign up for this event. "We are trying to get as many teams to compete as we can," he explained.

Albert explained that the teams competing must consist of five members, and a men's and women's division will be used. "Teams in the men's division must have four men and one woman," he commented, "and the women's teams must have four women and one man."

One member from each team must start at the 50 yard line and run to the middle of the football field. This member must then don a pair of pajamas and run to the north end of the field, where his or her teammates will be waiting with their "vehicle."

The pajama-clad team member then hops into the bed and the other four push the bed approximately 220 yards down the track to the finish line. The teams in each division posting the lowest times will be declared the winners.

Albert added that the men's division teams' beds must have female "passengers," and vice versa.

A 50 cent per team entry fee will be charged to cover publicity expenses. McDonald's will sponsor this race, and will award prizes to the winning teams.

Sign-up sheets for this event will be posted in the Student Union. Albert Zavala, Linda Garland, Doug Brehm and Tammy Lavy have organized this contest as a project for the Leadership in Camping and Recreation class.

Playoffs for the Trivia Bowl, a contest somewhat like the game shows on TV, will be in Brown Auditorium on Friday, Oct. 15 at 7:00 p.m. Questions will be asked about "anything and everything." Those participating in the contest will be a faculty team, an alumni team, a faculty's spouses team, and five winning teams of students chosen from the preliminary rounds which will be conducted tonight in Brown Auditorium.

The Homecoming dance, which is a formal dance, will take place in the Student Union, Sat., Oct. 16 at 9:00 p.m., in honor of the Homecoming queen. The music will be provided by Starbird, a band from Lincoln, Neb. For the first time, "the theme will be carried out by decorations," commented Charlotte.

The traditional Homecoming parade, which the Student Council is in charge of, will set off the festivities at 12:45 p.m. Saturday. Starting on South Main Street and continuing down Euclid Street, the parade will complete its procession by circling the track at halftime of the football game, which begins at 2 p.m.

The two categories in the parade, one for floats and another for all other entries, will be judged on originality, construction, theme adherence, and over all appearance. The winners will be announced at halftime. There will be $50, $40 and $30 prizes for the floats and $20, $15 and $10 prizes for the additional entries. The band will also participate in the parade.

The royalty, made up of nine candidates, will ride in the parade in antique cars. The queen and her two attendants will be crowned at halftime by president Paul Hoffman. The queen will be chosen from the senior or junior, candidates and an attendant from both the sophomore and freshman classes will be chosen.

Election promises lack consistency, credibility

"If I'm elected President of the United States this November, I promise to"

How many times has the American public listened to zealous campaign promises and seen them promptly forgotten as soon as the candidate assumes office?

It seems the harder the candidates grope for credibility and consistency, the harder these qualities have eluded them. Former Georgia governor Jimmy Carter hoped to cash in on the post-Watergate aftershock by promising less government and more positive programs for the public (Newsweek magazine).

He has emphasized his born-again religious beliefs and his down-home country background in an effort to obtain the trust, confidence and most importantly, the votes, of the public.

His "consistency" is evident in his constant changes of policy on tax reforms. (This week he was advocating tax breaks for middle income families; last week he wanted to increase taxes for workers earning more than $12,800 per year, which would effect over half the nation's work force.)

President Ford has tried to emphasize his experience and performance in office also. He has won many supporters because of his above-board honest dealings, but allegations have surfaced recently regarding Ford's acceptance of campaign contributions from large corporations.

It was also disclosed that U.S. Steel's chief Washington lobbyist entertained President Ford on several occasions at plush reports. While this may not directly reflect on his performance in office, most people would agree that the Ford Administration's programs have been something less than spectacular anyway.

Each candidate has tried to capture the farm vote by promising tax breaks and higher prices for farm goods, and promptly contradicted his position by favoring embargoes on foreign grain sales.

As in any contest, one contestant will win and the other must face defeat. But in the minds of many Americans, unless these candidates' airy promises are kept, the only real losers of this Presidential election will be the general public.

Campaign views expressed

With less than a month of campaigning time left, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter are getting down to the "nitty-gritty" of their presidential bids — persuading the public to vote for them in the Nov. 2 election.

While many people remain undecided, some have taken sides with either Ford or Carter and have some good reasons. A questionnaire regarding presidential choices was placed randomly in students' mailboxes last week. The responses represent several different viewpoints.

Prof. Connie Nichols, home ec, replied, "I feel excited about the race and I'm determined to vote for the candidate of my choice." She went on to say, "I judge the candidates by my own standards of integrity and leadership abilities and base my decision on these qualities."

Another student's reaction was quite different than the enthusiasm Prof. Nichols expressed. Doug Burkholder, fr, McPherson, said, "I don't think much of our system of governing."

Religion plays a vital role in what many students think of the candidates. An anonymous student from Rocky Ford, Colorado says, "Ford has the right Christian attitude and is the most capable of handling the situation."

But Doug, who hasn't changed his mind since the campaign began, says, "Carter is the right man. His religion and ideals are what influenced my decision."

Ben Hilton, fr, Nigeria, Africa, supports President Ford. Ben disagrees with Doug's viewpoint, saying, "Carter got started with good attitudes and goals, but when he got caught up in the campaign he discarded his values in order to win." Ben has decided to stick with Ford because he has some experience in the White House. A student from Moulton, Ia., replied, "I believe Ford was more direct with his answers during the recent debate." Birdie Hall, Carrollton, Mo., simply says, "Ford's gonna win!"

Several students replied anonymously because they believed giving their names would interfere with their right to a private ballot. And many of the students given questionnaires failed to respond at all, substantiating the claims of widespread voter apathy.

Regardless of the election's outcome, the voters have been presented a chance to voice their opinions. And that is what makes democracy.

Public eye scans Carter, Ford as Nov. 2 deadline approaches

by Celia Stover

In the public eye at all times, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter are undergoing even closer scrutiny by the voting (and even non-voting) public as the Nov. 2 election date draws near.

Since Ford tripped into the President's office by accident on Aug. 9, 1974, all of his strengths and weaknesses have been on display.

His political attitude has changed since he became President. He is no longer awed by the presence of great world leaders, and his outlook has expanded as a result of increased exposure international and domestic problems.

He is a bluff, hearty Midwesterner who is unlikely to show the strain under which he operates. Critics sometimes say that Ford has no compassion for the underprivileged of America. One White House advisor describes him as "the kind of guy who would take the shirt off his back and give it to a poor kid on the street and then walk in and veto the day care program."

Ford's background has had great influence on his attitude toward the Presidency. His parents instilled a confidence in him that he carried with him.

He has utilized his inherent assets to their fullest. Although he made only a B average at the University of Michigan and was rejected by Yale Law School, he remained undaunted. Three years later he was accepted.

He seems to have an uncanny knack for getting along with people — even his "enemies." His unassuming exterior covers an ambitious, confident man.

In his 25 years in the House he frequently let his conservatism show through. He continually voted against "federal aid to education, Medicare, and anti-pollution programs." His viewpoint has changed since he became President—federal aid to education and illness insurance programs have met his approval.

Ford is eager to meet Carter in break-neck pace of a presidential campaign. Said one Ford supporter, "It's not that he has any personal animosity toward Carter. He just thinks he's better equipped to run the country than Carter."

"I want the American people to understand my character, my weaknesses, the kind of person I am," states Jimmy Carter.

He has baffled the American voter with his attempts to appeal to so many seemingly conflicting sectors of society—"Playboy" readers on one hand, evangelists on the other.

He is a complex, lonely, sometimes introspective man who spent many of his growing years trying to balance conflicting situations. His parents were politically opposite—the Old South and the New.

To be successful on Nov. 2, he has to show the voters that he is not a regional candidate. In this way he can appeal to many facets of society.

In doing so he doesn't feed a different line to each audience, rather he brings up a different aspect of his background and emphasizes this for different audiences. Even when he has no ties to an audience, he can adjust to his tactics to fit the general mood.

This tactic has resulted in some of the most dubious moments of his campaign. It also earned him the title of "fuzzy" or "flip-flopper."

His spiritual rebirth showed the depth of his convictions. In the course of his conversion, Carter was jarred to realize that he loved politics more than Christ. This realization was the basis for a reassessment of his beliefs that later brought him to be born again.

Although religion plays a large part in his personal life, Carter maintains a strict separation of church and state. Though it is his religion that gets him over the rough spots, it's his intelligence that has built his political success.

Along with his intelligence, his political instincts are sound. When talking about "society's underdogs" he makes people take notice of his eloquence. However his instincts seem to be failing him lately, as in the "Playboy" interview.

While Governor of Georgia Carter had a tendency to be uncompromising in his stand on certain issues; refusing to listen to his advisors until the last minute. He may not even take the advice offered to him by his advisors at times.

Carter's biggest asset has to be his self-confidence. After an encounter with a would-be Birch Bayh supporter who expressed his opinion in no uncertain terms; "don't want you to win," Carter whispered to himself "I know you don't. But I shall."

Political system probed by determined voters

by Kim Thiessen

"Democracy is the worst of all political systems; except for all the others."

Perhaps this quote from Winston Churchill sums up the feelings of most college students concerning the American political system.

One student added this comment, "I'm glad Americans can voice their opinions and vote, even though the electoral college actually elects the president."

On the opposite end of the spectrum, there is a good deal of political apathy on the McPherson College campus.

When asked which candidate they plan to vote for in November, many students said that they have no intention of even bothering to vote.

This viewpoint, however, is not expressed by everyone. "I feel excitement, determination and pride in our system of government," said one anxious new voter.

Edith Simmons, fr, Salina, says,

"In my opinion, it (the American political system) has worked better than some of the other political systems, even though it isn't perfect. I'm pretty confident that the system meets the needs of most people."

In accordance with national political polls, candidate preference seems equally divided.

"As of now Carter's inexperience is proving to be a liability. He's done and said some very foolish things, which makes one wonder if he really has the background to make significant decisions that would be required of a president." This was the view expressed by Dr. Raymond Flory.

Dr. Leland Lengel, who supports Mr. Carter in the upcoming election, has these thoughts about the American system of government.

"My feeling is that the system works pretty well. It reflects the will of the majority, and the times when we don't like the system are the times when we don't agree with the majority."

Female trainer sets precedent

by Marie Petty
 Women's rights have become a topic of heated discussion during the past several years, and this publicity has opened up many new opportunities for women. And Celia Stover is taking full advantage of these opportunities. She serves along with Al Sammis as a trainer for the men's football team. This physical education major from Manhattan, Ks., became interested in training last spring when she took a Care and Treatment class. Coach Ray asked Celia if she would be interested in the job and then referred her to a clinic sponsored by the Cramer Company this summer. The time-consuming job of assistant trainer carries a heavy load of responsibility. It is not just during the four quarters of each football game that Celia works. Four mornings a week she is stationed in the training room from 9-11 a.m. when therapy sessions are conducted. These sessions could include ultra-sound treatments, heat treatments and whirlpools. Again at 2:30 she returns and begins re-taping and re-wrapping injured knees and ankles which have to be done daily. Her chores end around 6 p.m.

people too. They have feelings just like everybody else and have a lot to offer." Another therapy session is held immediately following the game. "It always helps the mood if they've just won." Taking care of the players medically as well as relating to them verbally are equally important aspects of this job. Celia recommends the classes Care and Treatment, First Aid, Anatomy, and Kinesiology for other prospective trainers. One of Celia's biggest dreams is to go to Germany and pursue her interest in this field. Celia is also a member of the college choir and is managing editor of "The Spectator."

Ambassadors serve college, recruit students

Working with a force of 28 students representing all four classes and 23 majors, the Mac Ambassadors have begun another year of college service projects. Responsibility, dependability and leadership are the prime qualifications for membership in the organization. This year's group consists mainly of freshmen and sophomores. The Ambassadors' first project was the organization of the college booth at the Kansas State Fair. Its purpose was to recruit new students. Ten seniors were given an all-expense paid visit to the college for Homecoming weekend, and were invited to participate in the Homecoming festivities.

As one of their projects, the Ambassadors will be asking new students what, in their opinion, are the good and bad aspects of McPherson College. Tours of the campus will be conducted on Nov. 6 for alumni participating in the class agent program. The Ambassadors will help with the planning of the Regional Youth Conference, show high school seniors around during Campus Days and are in charge of open house for Homecoming. The directors, Joe Johnston, sponsor, and Jan Schrock, coordinator, are planning a contest in which a prize will be awarded to the Ambassador who recruits the most students.

During the games there is additional pressure. Training kits, air splints and fresh water have to be taken out on the field. She says, "When a guy gets hit or falls on a previous injury I hurt too because I know he hurts. We tend to categorize football players as "big and dumb" but they are

Celia doesn't believe she has to work extra hard to prove "that a woman can do a man's job." The guys are aware of her presence—"they watch their language a little bit when I'm around."

'Dogs bury St. Mary's

Halfback Dennis Colon eludes a host of St. Mary's defenders as he runs around left end for a big gain. The Bulldogs swamped St. Mary's 34-20 last Saturday. (photo by Rhodes)

by Tracy Ikenberry

A record-tying 34-point third quarter pulled the McPherson Bulldogs from a 0-13 first half deficit and catapulted them to a 34-20 victory over defending KCAC champion St. Mary of the Plains.

The 34 point output, the most since a November 11, 1952 75-20 blasting of Friends, gives the Bulldogs a 2-1 overall and 2-0 KCAC record. The 2-0 record ties them for first with Friends University.

The Bulldogs started slowly, falling behind 13-0. Near the end of the half quarterback Mike Ewing hit tight-end Rick McLaren with a 47-yd. pass, with only one second remaining.

The Cavalier's defense held the Bulldogs on the one yard line the final play of the half.

In the third quarter the Bulldogs came out like, well, Bulldogs. On the first of the five third quarter touchdowns, Tim Jones rolled around end to score from the two, with Ewing kicking the PAT.

After an interception by Mark Verdi, Monte Spangler scored from six yards out and Ewing added the part to give Mac a 14-13 lead. Ewing dove in from the one for the third TD of the quarter to give the 'Dogs a 20-13 lead. This score came less than two minutes after Spangler's run.

Pride stays intact

After a 40-yd. TD pass to Dennis Colon was called back, Jones again scored, racing 55 yards on the next play. Colon and Ewing then finished up the scoring for McPherson. Colon landed just inside the end zone after a picture-perfect diving catch of Ewing's twelve yard pass. Ewing converted his fourth of five kicks to give the Bulldogs their final 34 point total.

"I was very satisfied with the pride we had to come back," said Coach Rominger. "Nothing inspirational was said at half, we just changed our game plan and decided to run outside. Basically it was up to the players."

Game sets records

Rominger cited several players for outstanding performances. On defense, he was especially pleased with the performance of the inside line people—Jerry Aligo, James Brooks, Kevin Kennedy, Casey Jaworski, and Greg Forkner, who came in when Jaworski was injured. Jaworski is deemed "doubtful" for Saturday's game with Bethany.

Offensively, Rominger was pleased with the blocking of the left side. Among those he named were McLaren, Lester Finney, and Larry Gilbert, who was named Bulldog player of the week. He also pointed out Spangler, whose game high 160 yards were the most ever for any player he has coached. Mike Ewing was also mentioned as having "his best ball game."

McPherson's record-setting offensive output was the best in 22 years. The first downs were the most since September 17, 1954 against Kearney State (24). Total offense of 479 yards, was the most since November 11, 1954, against Bethany (482). The 326 yards rushing were the most since an October 10, 1954 victory over Friends (369).

Looking ahead to this week's game at Bethany, Rominger speaks of the need for a combined offensive and defensive effort.

"Bethany must beat us to stay in the KCAC race," declared Rominger, after the Swedes' 37-33 loss to Sterling on Saturday, dropping them to 2-1 in KCAC play. "It's their Homecoming, and they'll be psyched up for us, especially after we beat them last year in something of a fluke." The Bulldogs scored 21 points in the last five minutes to win 21-13.

Close game predicted

"They have a wide-open offense, probably the best in the conference," he said, citing running backs Alstaat and Jilka, and quarterback Tom Junke as dangerous offensive threats. Defensively, the Bethany squad is toughest up front," which is the strongest part of our (offensive) game."

Rominger looks for the game to be "very close," but he says, "I think we can beat Bethany. Our offense is very versatile, not depending on any one man."

If the Bulldogs can get good efforts out of both the offense and perennially strong defense, the Swede Homecoming festivities could have a rather dull note cast upon them.

Women excel in tennis, volleyball

by Lisa Gaskill

hoping to improve last year's record and have fun in the process, the volleyball team has opened the 1976 season with hard practices under a new head coach.

The new coach this year is head track coach Art Ray. Although not a newcomer to college athletics, he is new to the game of volleyball. Both the coach and the team are working together this season in order to master the basics of volleyball. Their goal is to learn to play as a unified team, not as individuals.

The team has already had several practice matches with Hutchinson Community Junior College, Central College and McPherson High School. Coming out on top, Oct. 3, the women also scrimaged Bethany College.

The first match of the season was Sept. 30 at Marymount College in Salina. McPherson came away the winners, 15-3, 15-10.

"They went out there and did what they were supposed to do," said Coach Ray. "Everyone seemed to have a good time and have also had good team work."

He added, "If we continue to learn, we're going to get better throughout the season."

Coach Ray recognized Denise Creevan, Jeanne Suellentrop and Robin Hovis for good spiking during the game, and also praised the entire team for consistent serving.

The second match of the season was last night at Bethel. Results were not available at presstime. During the season two matches will be played between each league school.

Those on the team this year are Denise Creevan, Peggy Davis, Robin Hovis, Pam Medford, Lynn Merryfield, Kay Ann Porter, Joni Redmond, Carolynn Smith and returning all-conference player Jeanne Suellentrop.

Undeclared in conference play with only one conference match remaining, the women's tennis team has high hopes for the KCAC Championship this year. Coach Doris Coppock predicts that the team will have an excellent chance of winning the Conference title.

The women played almost flawlessly in their last three matches. The Bulldogs beat Bethany 7-2 Sept. 28 at Lindsborg, beat Southwestern by the same score here last Friday and placed second in a triangular with Fort Hays State College and Wichita State University here last Monday.

Coach Coppock is happy "with the way the team has responded to coaching and the amount of effort they are putting forth."

This season no new recruits were lured out on the courts and Coach Coppock was concerned before the season opened. She thought the team might be hurt without the added strength, but he noted, "we weren't."

"Everyone has improved so much this year that it seems as if we've brought in better players," she continued.

Following are the match results:

McPherson vs. Bethany

Harriers win again, prepare for Bethany

by John Rader

Following their second team victory in two weeks, the McPherson Harriers returned home from Oklahoma Baptist last Saturday ready to compete in the Bethany Invitational at Lindsborg today at 5:15 p.m.

In the Oklahoma Baptist meet DeWayne Jackson took individual first place over the five mile course in a time of 26:05. Fred Wilson was the second Bulldog runner to finish the race with a time of 27:41, and good for fourth place. Just behind Wilson was teammate Dave Burgess in a time of 27:44.
