Required Class Attendance?

Should the college student be required to attend all classes regularly? Two conflicting opinions exist concerning this issue. One opinion is that if a student can miss one, two, three, or any number of class periods, and still write a satisfactory examination over that course, he should be allowed to do so. On he? the other hand, there are those who believe that there are certain values received from class attendance that cannot be gotten otherwise

Staunch supporters of the system of required class attend- invective with the careless abandon ance set forth as their main arguments the following

Examinations cannot tell the whole story. Much more can be gotten from class recitation. Clarity is obtained in the mind of the individual student by repetition such as he would get in class.

Optional class attendance is becoming by far the more pictures. None is willing to admit popular system. For its existance are the following reasons:

Class attendance is merely the means to an end. If the end can be obtained by some other method than class attendance, well and good. Responsibility is placed on the individual student, not the teacher. Excuse slips, written excuses of any sort, waste time, offering only hit and miss method of checking on the class cutter.

Because of this, the tendency, especially in the larger schools, is away from compulsory class attendance.

Success In Tablets

Subject of much comment and study has been the fact It's Educational and Fascinating that 100,000 college freshmen fail to make the grade each year. Professor Samuel L. Hamilton of New York University, who has published a pamphlet entitled, "What It Takes To Succeed In College," asserts that college "success", as dis-tinguished from the mere getting of grades, is dependent chiefly upon four characteristics—purpose, social adjustment, ability to make decisions, and sensitivity Success seems to be the outcome of many conditions beyond the control either of the student or the college. Professor Hamilton asserts that if the student has the intelligence necessary to understand his studies and the health and vigor needed for hard work, all the other traits which he needs for successful transition from high school to college may be acquired. When the student already possesses these traits, it has been shown that they were produced by previous experiences in home, school, playground, camp, church, part-time job or vacation work.

Of interest to parents and students are the "tips" to success shown in the study. Professor Hamilton's conclusion is that the student has a better chance to make good if he safeguards his health, participates in athletics, has occasional "dates", finds a person to whom he can make confidences, enters into extra-curricular activities, keeps up a satisfactory religious worship, retains fellowship with parents and friends, and lives on the campus. Hamilton suggests that the students should study as many hours daily as are required to finish assignments; that he should learn to make and keep a schedule of work; that he should have plenty of exercise and rest, doing a reasonable amount of reading. The prospective successful student should learn to appreciate literature, keep accurate accounts of his money, learn to seek competent advice with-out becoming over-dependent on it. He should find a hobby and should keep track of what is going on outside his collegiate world. Hamilton's rules are common sense rules, and they are sometimes impossible to follow, but one may profit by acknowledging their excellence and bearing in mind the fact that reasonable application of them would afford him a well balanced life.

Leo Postman, our Jewish refugee student, is going to meet with the I. R. C. this Friday afternoon at 4:00 in the Student Assembly Room. Said Leo, "I don't have as many exciting tales and adventures to relate as does 'Dutchy' but I will be glad to talk to your International Relations group" Although he thinks we aren't interested in what he has to tell us, we are interested. Let us prove that interest by coming to hear his talk this Friday afternoon.

The ancient rivalry between the Bethany Swedes and the McPherson college Bulldogs will be renewed again tonight as the two teams tangle on the local gridiron in their annual "grudge" battle.

What's the best football team in the country? Who's going to win the Big Six? Who's going to play in the Rose Bowl? Who's going to make All American this year? These are a few questions football fans are asking each other now. So this week your sports editor will hurriedly the notional football scene and make a few predictions. scan the national football scene and make a few predictions.

Who are the strongest teams in the country? In my opinion Minnesota and Texas University stand at the top of the nation's out-standing teams this fall. Both have run roughshod over every oppon-ent they have met. Texas has won every game by at least 30 points and many who have seen Dana Bible's team call it one of the greatest teams ever to come from the state of Texas. In Pete Layden and Jack Crain, D. X. Bible has two of the best backs in the country.

Minnesota stood at the top of the national ranking of teams last week. As a result of victories over Washington, Illinois and Pitts-burgh. Followers of the Golden Gophers compare the present team to the great Minnesota teams of 1934 and 1935 when the Gophers won ational championships and had such stars as "Pug" Lund, Sheldon Beise, Stan Kostka, and others.

Urban Odson, Minnesota tackle, was All-American last year. Bruce Smith, Gopher halfback, picked by many as "the back of the year," has lived up to advance notices and is the spearhead of the Gopher attack.

Other top ranking teams include Navy of the east, Notre Dame, North-Other top ranking teams include Navy of the east. Notre Dame, North-western, Michigan of the midwest, Duke and Tulane of the south, and Oregon State and Stanford on the coast. There are many other good teams that may come up and crowd these out of the spotlight. Notre Dame, under Tom Leahy this year, is as yet undefeated and if it continues in its victory march will be high in the national ranking. Michigan, conqueror of Northwestern last week, is undefeated in spite of the loss of Tom Har-mon. Forest Evashevski, and Ed Frutig of last year's team. Navy has one of the best teams in years and is doned to win the cestern champion. one of the hest teams in years and is doped to win the eastern champion-ship. Stanford is still considered the best team on the coast in spite of its defeat at the hands of Oregon State two weeks ago.

What about the Bix Six? In my opinion the winner of the Bix Six this year will be the winner of the Nebraska-Missouri game tomorrow. And in my opinion Nebraska will beat Missouri, even though the Cornhuskers did not look very impressive in their first real test against Indiana last

All American? It's still too early to pick an All American team, but such stars as Frankie Albert of Stanford, Urban Odson of Minnesota, Pete Layden of Texas, and Bill DeCorrevant of Northwestern will have to be given serious consideration when the time comes.

Billy Hildenbrand of Indiana, Otto Grahm of Northwestern, and Tommy Kuzma of Michigan are busy fighting it out for the tile of "Sophomore of the year." Tommy Kuzma, who had the dubious honor of filling Tommy Harmon's position in the Michigan line-up has the upper hand so far.

The game of the week? Without a doubt the Michigan-Minnesota game Besides fighting over the famous each team will be trying to keep its place in the national rankings.
