McPherson '59 Graduate Attends Yale Divinity School

Carl Harris, a '59 graduate of McPherson and former president of the Student Council, is now attending Yale University Divinity School.

He is studying to be a minister and is taking New Testament Interpretation, Church History, Psychological Foundations of Personalities, Church and the Ministry, and Christianity and Contemporary Culture.

Each of these courses is strictly a lecture type class with a required outside reading of one book per course per week. Carl spends 8 to 10 hours in study daily.

On the cultural side is a symphony on the main campus and a legitimate stage theater, "The Schubert," downtown. At this theater, plays stop for a short premiere run before going to Broadway.

Carl's adviser is Richard Niebuhr, brother of Reinhold Niebuhr, theologian.

Carl says the courses which help him most in graduate school are Trans-Mississippi West, History, Latin-American History, and Creative Writing. What he misses most about Mac are Chaff, history under Dr. Flory, and choir.

Carl is a counselor for two YMCA boys' clubs in grade school, in part of his spare time. One club is in the fifth grade and the other is in sixth.

Before enrolling at Yale, he attended Danforth Fellowship Camp and did some sightseeing in Chicago.

Also he adds that the food at Yale is the best he has eaten in any institution, outside of home.

In December, the juniors will challenge the seniors in a debate concerning a campus issue, and the winners of these two debates will meet in a serious, political debate in January.

The class officers are choosing members to represent each class in these debates.

To quote Fred Dale B.F.W.: "This is an experimentation to try something different in chapel programs."

Marriage And Family Class Discusses Personal Matters

Dr. D. W. Bittinger

The Marriage and Family class comprises 102 students this year. This seems like a large class in which to discuss together rather personal and intimate matters. Yet the group finds itself a congenial one and many helpful discussions already have been entered into.

Sharing from many backgrounds is one good way to discover better ideas.

Recently, the discussion centered on the family of the future as present statistics and findings seem to chart it.

These things seemed indicated:

It will be a mobile family, moving an average of 13 times. This will make it harder for the family to become community interested.

It will be an urban family, likely located in the suburbs. This will mean that the father, and perhaps the mother, will spend from one to three hours per day getting to and from work, thus limiting the amount of time available for family contact and fellowship.

Probably will have long week-ends, however. These can be used rather deadeningly for "catching up on sleep," or they can be used constructively for the common tasks of home building and home enrichment.

It will have opportunity for lengthy vacations, probably with pay. These can be spent in commercialized areas where the family may become haggard from patronizing the various amusements offered. At least some vacations can be spent in National Parks, or in out-of-door situations where the family can learn to know each other better.

The family of the future will not have many "things in common" to hold it together, such as jobs, farming, gardening, or even ownership of home or furniture. It, therefore, should exercise more care in the careful selecting of the mates who will build it.

The family of the future probably will have more religion in it than the family of this generation. Likewise it will probably have more understanding and love. This will all be in its favor.

It will be possible to build the family of the future into a great and happy family if the participants will work at it.

May God bless the families of tomorrow.

One can never pay in gratitude; one can only pay "in kind" somewhere else in life.

Millions To Take Part In Annual UNICEF Drive

This weekend more than two million children and youth in about 10,000 communities will take part in the annual UNICEF drive, in which they collect money for the UN Children's fund instead of treats for themselves.

UNICEF is an agency originally created in 1946 to give emergency relief to European children suffering from the destruction of war. In 1948 it extended aid to Palestine's refugee mothers and children.

In 1950 the UN General Assembly extended UNICEF's life to help in other underdeveloped nations and in 1953 the General Assembly voted to continue UNICEF indefinitely.

The main purpose of UNICEF today is helping governments plan long-term and far-reaching improvements to control wide spread disease, which is caused by poor methods of sanitation and caring for children.

The aid of UNICEF knows no racial, religious, political, or nationality bounds, for it is given to those in need wherever they may live. Also it brings permanent benefit to children wherever UNICEF aid is given.

UNICEF has helped approximately one billion children in the world, 750 million of whom live in underdeveloped countries.

Did You Stop To Say Thank You This Week?

By Faye Brunner

How many of you stopped and said "thank-you" this week, to anyone for anything? How many of you thanked any of the large group of people for making homecoming such a complete success?

A whole list of people helped to make this just so. There were people who cut up carrots for the chili supper, people who helped hold floats together on a windy Saturday morning, and people who put their best foot forward to make alumni welcome.

Someone judged the floats, someone lined the football field, and maybe someone let you borrow a scarf or blanket for the game.

The football men practiced hard and won, the cheerleaders showed heaps of spirit, and the various clubs and classes helped keep that spirit alive by the work they produced on their floats.

Often, we see only the big jobs done that necessarily deserve "Thanks." But, let's not forget the little jobs, too, - the ones that make the big jobs possible.

Then, there is that special little glow that makes you feel all good inside, whether you are the huskiest of men or the daintiest of women.

So, if you haven't said "Thank-you" to any of those people, allow me to start the ball rolling now.

Thanks to you all!!

Inter-Squad Action

This year the McPherson College football B-team has been unable to find games, so they have been making their own.

Every Monday a game length scrimmage is held for the players who do not see much or any action in the game the Friday or Saturday before.

Braves Invade Canine Land In KCAC Conference Clash

The Ottawa Braves will invade McPherson tonight for an all important conference game for both teams. McPherson needs this victory to stay in the "first division," while Ottawa must post a victory to keep their conference title hopes alive.

The Braves have been a very aggressive ball club this year. They have a very strong line that is backed up by an outstanding backfield. The Braves are under led in conference play this year.

The Braves are led by a junior quarterback, Stan Bettin. Bettin is a very able passer and also does some of the pass receiving. James Nider and Albert Lewis are all of the outstanding Ottawa backs. They are both very good runners.

Much of the Braves' success this year has been due to their hard charging line. This line has as its members Jerry Stice, one of the best linemen in the con-
